

Hadron spectroscopy: today and tomorrow.

Adam Szczepaniak

Department of Physics and CEEM Indiana University, Jefferson Lab

aszczepa@indiana.edu

Hadron spectroscopy plays an important role in constraining models used to describe non-perturbative QCD phenomena. I will discuss recent developments in theory and phenomenology and the emerging opportunities and challenges given the high precision data forthcoming from the Jefferson Lab and other facilities.